Stadler, a global specialist in the design, production and assembly of sorting equipment for the recycling industry, has its global headquarters in Altshausen, Germany. Looking to expand its North American presence, Stadler partnered with Workplace Architecture + Design for the design of their American headquarters in Winston-Salem, North Carolina. Working collectively with their German team, the building was designed with a focus on sustainability -- a directive that was instilled in not just the building design and finishes, but also in the furniture specifications.

Working to achieve a tight completion timeline, our team worked intimately and collectively with the General Contractor and Owner to ensure design requirements were understood and met at each stage of the process. The new facility will greatly expand Stadler's capability to serve their clients and customers throughout North America and will help grow their business.
